SOME STRANGE FACTS The Mechanism of the Brain-Seat of the Faculties of Mind.

Dr. Brown-Sequard lectured last evening to a very large audience at Plymouth Church. The subject was "The Mechanism and the Seat in the Brain of the Volitional, Sensorial, and Mental Phenomena."

Every part of the nervous system can be a point from which proceeds an irritation which will either stop an activity of the brain or put it is play. The brain itself has the power as well as the nerves of acting your ear you discover that a disorder of movements comes almost at once. There is an effect on certain parts of the brain exerted by nerves in the mucous membrane in the tubes of the ear. The greatest variety of pheromena may come either from irritation bed again the morbid symptoms disappeared. Three times this phenomenon was him the boy told him that while fishing a piece of glass had penetrated beneath the nail of his great toe. By pressing on the skin near the nail the boy had a recurrence of the same symptoms, but after the surgeon had cut away a piece of the flesh the convulsions ceased. It may be seen by this that an irritation in a very minute part of the body may have an immense power. It has been discovered, you know, that the irritation of portions of certain muscles of the eye can produce in the brain a condition called catalepsy, or loss of feeling. When we see that a man's thigh may be amputated without any sense of feeling on his part, when we see that irritation may be exerted on the brain by means of irritation of a few fibres of a muscle of the eye, we can understand how immense is the field of important researches both in a psychological and physiological and also in a therapeutical point of view. There are fac's extremely important concerning the kind of influence of the irritation by means of which activity is arrested in the nervous system. We know that respiration can be storped immediately by the galvanization of a particular nerve, and so also by an act of the will. In reference to the POWER OF THE WILL, mechanism. The future of medicine lies the supreme place which it once occupied. gard to the arrest of activity. Our consciousness, as you know, ceases

DURING SLEEP.

It is now well-nigh proved that it is through an arrest of activity. Sleep does not appear through a mere cessation of activity, but it is through something active that sleep is caused. The idea that sleep depends on the contraction of the blood-vessels of the brain, which has been put forward in England and here, is absolutely false; for it has been shown, on the contrary, that when they are dilated sleep can take place as well as before. Convulsions can also be stopped, for they are a morbid phenomena due to a certain condition of the cells. A negro, whose mas-ter had convulsions through an affection of utes at a time, so that he could not be dressed, made the observation one day that by pressing upon the big toe the convulsions ceased; so that afterward whenever he dressed him he simply performed this act and kept his master still. In a case published by Abercrombie, which is very important as showing that the disease must have existed a long time before death, a lady-who had had previously some trouble with her sight, and had had attacks resembling certain forms of epilepsy, but was at this time apparently in good health-passed the evening with her friends and appeared in excellent spirits, but the same night died. The left side of her brain was found so diseased as to establish the fact that it had existed for a long time. Thus, with this lady, one side of the brain had performed all the functions that are usually attributed to that organ. We semetimes find that the reverse is true--that a very slight irritation may cause intense symptoms, and produce the freshest variety of them, while for a considerable disease we see slight indications. We find, thus, that there is no relation between the symptoms and the seat of the disease itself. There are cases showing that diseases in the brain can disappear through what might cause disease of the brain, as in the case of a lunatic who was accidentally cured by getting his sisterhood by infecting seven of them with cranium broken from the blow of another lunatic. We must admit that the two sides of the brain are completely alike in their functions, and that

ONE OF THE TWO ALONE is entirely sufficient to perform the functions attributed to both. I can show you that the present mode of education developes only one half the brain. It is a very great mistake we commit in not teaching our children to make use of the two sides of the body indifferently. We write with one hand, we should learn to use both. We make use of one side of the body for a great many things, especially in gestures. It is a great pity, because in developing certain sides of the body we develop certain sides of the brain, and would be a great gain if we had two brains to work with. In that case we would not then be deprived of the power of speech through disease of the brain, for we could use the unoffected side. It is just so with the body. The theory has been received almost universally for a long time, and is yet admitted, that the mind, when acting to produce voluntary movement, performs just the same thing that the pianist does on the piano in the same way, by striking certain tibres of the brain, the will produces the voluntary movements. It is considered also that the mind, as the recipient of sensations, is very much like a hotel-keeper, who knows, when a bell is struck, what room the disturbance comes from. There is no such prolongation of the fibres from the muscles all over the body to the brain. Two facts, I think, show it. One consists in showing that the number of fibres by which the brain communicates with with the number of movements we can perform; in the same way the variety of sensations implies an immense number of them, and there is no possibility of such a number of them existing in the upper part of the spinal cord; another argument is that there are many cases on record by which the bond of union between the spinal cord and the rest of the body was in a great measure destroyed-one-tenth of it existing in some cases—and still the movements were per- of the best minds in the community, the real formed more or less completely, and the sensations were transmitted to the sensorium almost as perfectly as in health; so that a very few fibres uniting the brain with the frame ready and convincing answers from spinal cord are sufficient for communication between the brain and the body.

A startling fact was discovered in Paris a long time ago, that one part of the left side trict school-house. of the brain seems to be the seat of the faculty of expressing ideas by speech. I bebrain as regards the mental power, but that, and unexpectedly drops through your finfis yery likely to be the case. The faculty of gers, leaving a couple of cousins in one

The greatest variety of effect may be produced by irritation of any one part of the optic bands, as they are called, and there is no conclusion to be drawn from those facts than this: that an irritation expression of the optic bands facts than this: that an irritation expression of the optic bands are irritation expression of wary cautiousness in his face.

It has been considered that certain parts the brain. of the brain have the power of acting upon certain parts of the body. This localization is the greatest attempt at demonstration of the view of certain physiologists that has yet been made. My assistant and pupil has just published in France a system of researches establishing that the means employed by Ferrier were quite inapplicable upon itself, and producing or causing a and untrustworthy. Ferrier applied galvanism, and paid no attention to the fact parts than these he wished to be acted upon, so that there were a great variety of effects of the nerves of the base of the brain. The base of the brain certainly has a great variety of action over certain muscles, but the seat of the will has don a boy was found, on getting out of not that power. The conclusion of Ferbed in the morning, to be seized with the most violent convulsions and an acute attack of mania. On putting him to be again the morbid symptoms discovered the muscles of the feet, because by tickling them the muscles of the feet muscles of the fe The immense field of clinical medicine disobserved, and when the surgeon examined proves entirely the theory. So with other localizations. A French physiologist thought he had discovered the seat of vital force in the medulla oblongata, but I have had a good many animals deprived of that, and yet they have lived. The speaker next spoke of the connection between the mind and the body as regards voluntary action and sensation. What can be done in certain cases by the nervous system without any influence of the will sometimes immense. The will simply states that a particular movement is to be done. The act of performance does not in the least in the dim distance to fly and alight. Colobelong to the will. The mechanism by which nel Tuller, of Green Bay, expressed the the performance takes place is rather compli- opinion that he could shoot it. PUBLIC HYGIENE.-It is not long since an accomplished physician, being asked by a ayman what real advance had been made n his profession within the century, replied that during the past generation the most astonishing strides had been made in every department of medicine except therapeutics. To say that a great deal more is known about | Colonel how he had aimed. He answered, disease, except in the matter of curing it, than used to be known does not carry much stepped up, took off his sole article of dress I recollect a surgeon who was accustomed comfort to the lay mind. And yet, in fact, on going into a hospital to say to the patients the advance in medical science has been that if any man coughed while he was there such as to contribute most powerfully and he would get no food during the day, and directly to the physical well-being of manthe coughing would always cease. We can kind. Therapeutics really does dwindle in stop sneezing by pressing on certain parts the light of recent discoveries to a suborof the face, and coughing is under the same dinate place among medical science from very much in the study of those facts in rethan cure has become a scientific maxim, and is supplemented by the maxim that prevention is more feasible than cure. To preserve health is the business of hygiene, and it is only of late years that hygiens has come to be recognized for what it now indisputably is-the most important of medical sciences. People are coming to see that there is no panacea, either discovered or discoverable, which can restore to the vigor of human health the constitution which, at first weak from inherited transgressions of the laws of health, has been still further shattered by the wilful or ignorant transgressions of the possessor of it, to whom his body is no longer an instrument, but a

> Carroll sustaine I and illustrated in an oration before the Medical Department of the University of New York. The oration deserves a far wider audience than that to which it was immediately addressed. Intelligent persons are coming now to understand that their physical well-being is not a mystery of which a physician only holds the key, but a most practical matter which rests very mainly with themselves, and upon the conditions of which it behoves them to inform themselves. But intelligent laymen have not yet arrived at a real knowledge of the truth, which all competent physicians know, that to take care of their own health they must take care of the bealth of whole classes too ignorant and too weak to look out for themselves. The fithy, ill-ventilated, and ill-drained slums of a great city like this spread the infection of their foulness beyond their own limits, and degrade the sanitary condition of the whole community which their existence disgraces. The pestilence generated by the filth of the slums will infect the quarters of which the inhabitants may be aware of the conditions of health and may for their own parts observe them. Mr. Carlyle's story of the poor woman whom rich men refused to recognize as a member of the human family and to succor, and who finally "proved her typhus fever," has a sanitary as well as a moral lesson. Even short of pestilence the mischief which the tenement-houses of New York may do to the inmates of its mansions is incalculable. Happily, although it is incalculable, it is perfectly preventable. We say that intelligent laymen have not a real knowledge of this fact. If they had they would assuredly take measures to improve the physical condition of their neighbors as well as their own .- New York World.

INSTRUCTIVE AMUSEMENTS IN COUNTRY TOWNS. - To the Editor of the Cincinnati Commercial: I know of no better plan to turnish a cheap, simple, and rational amusement to the whole people than that adopted in a large town in which I have very many pleasant acquaintances. The plan was simply this: Instead of the usual course of lectures, money enough was raised by subscription to open the town hall two nights each week. Then a list of the leading men and women in the town was prepared, and successively each was invited to read a paper, which was to be about half an hour long. The person usually selected his own subject. After the reading any permaking his fingers run on the keys; that in the same way, by striking certain fibres of subject. This question the reader was expected to answer. The experiment proved a complete success. Before the eve ning reading commenced the chairman read the notice for the next meeting, stating who was to read, and what subject the paper would treat upon. The announcement, for instance, that the leading banker would read a paper upon " Labor Reform" was sure to attract great attention. Who amongst all the audience ever supposed that the richest man the body is so extremely small compared in town had ever troubled his head about that subject? So, the paper was read to a crowded audience, and before all the questions had been answered it is quite probable that the banker had more ideas on the sub ject than when he commenced.

These meetings were con'inued quite three months with unflagging interest. It can at once be seen that they are much superior to the old fashioned debating lyceum in interpoint on which the success of the meetings hinges being the sharp questions asked, which require the best powers of mind to the lecturer. The plan is equally well adapted to the large town, or the rural community where the only place or meeting is the dis-

This is in perfect haring so prim as to make you squirm, mony with the theory that one half the brain and little boys with their eyes turned on their noses, and with an ex-pression on their faces of unearthly solemnity. Then follow uncles, taken in their overcoats, with a spreading inclination in ther clothes, hair, and faces, as if they were bound to get their money's worth; and aunts with warts on their noses and varnish on their bair, and preposterous lace collars about their necks. Then there is the bashful young man penned opposite the aggressive young lady, whom heaven and some married woman have designed for each other. There are also the pictures of cousin Aleck and his young wife, who stopped here when on their tour, and no young man looks at him without retiring at once and registering a terrible vow never to get married. Besides, there is the picture of the man who lived next door for eight years, at the end of which time his wife died, and he moved to Illinois with the children, and is now worth some $50,000. He has been photographed in his hat, which is one

An Indian stood there, clad solely in a

A new question is now claiming the at tention of debating societies and storeoungers in Preston county, West Va. It is, according to a correspondent of the Herald, this poser: "Which is the door, the hole or the frame that fills the hole? In entering a house do you push the frame back and go through the door, or do you push the door back and only go through the

An ex-judge, of Maine, who has again taken up the practice of the law, has a habit of taking his spectacles from his nose and twirling them in his hand.
